FRUIT GROWING IN CALIFORNIA

Is Not So Profitable As Many People Have Been Led to Believe and Orchards Are Being Abandoned,

Los Angeles, Cal, Aug. 25, 1915. Editor Dispatch: -I believe I promised to write a letter about the fruit many orchards or fruit ranches everywhere here on the coast in all stages the orchards have attained to bearing young to produce any fruit. And from all the information I can get, we have boxes at stipulated price per ton. They only seen a very small part of the territory that is planted to fruit rees, spread out in large flats about 3x6 housands upon thousands of acres in Eastern Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado and Utah having been plantd within the last five or six years.

You readers doubtless remember that from 4 to 6 years ago the East was flooded with literature describing in glowing terms the wonderful opportunities for making money by planting orchards in the west. Many corporations were organized, tracts of land were purchased and for a stipulated per acre they agreed to sell you the land, plant the trees and cultivate them for five years, when they would be ready to produce fruit and would sell readily at one to two thousand dollars per acre.

We have seen a number of these tracts,I remember one in the upper Willamette Valley in Washington con- Mrs. A. Huxsaw of Canfield who is taining miles of young orchards that appeared to be well kept and were Another speculative orchard ooking well. Evidently the corporation was carrying out their part of the half way from Santa Clara to Los contract to the letter which they could Angeles we passed a very large tract well afford to do, as they were being well paid for their work. But how about the orchards when they are turned over to their Eastern owners?

I was talking with the man in charge the Oregon exhibit in one of the halls at the fair and he said that the aged by one "Lewis" of St. normal demand for fruit in the United States is already fully supplied, and he predicted that thousands of acres of acres of orchards would be grubbed hibit him the use of the U. S. mail up and the land used for farming purposes.

Yesterday I met a man on the train coming up from San Diego who had recently been visiting friends who had moved to the great Payette Valley in Idaho that is largely planted to fruit trees. Three of his friends were growing fruit. A fourth friend had grubbed his 40 acre orchard out, planted the land in alfalfa and was making more money in the dairy business than the other three together were making from their fruit.

a small city near Hood River. He were at of Braddock, Pa., concluded a visit at said the parsonage lot contained six the home of David Reese and family, acres, mostly planted in fruit. He had Sunday, and returned to their respect. a quantity of the finest Elberta peaches he ever saw, as large as tincups. He thought he could make some money land is visiting her sister, Mrs. Charlie out of them. He picked them care-Baines, and family of Pleasant Hill. fully, wrapped each peach in tissue Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Christman and Fred Freis and family visited at Elias Miller and family from Niles, TuesBara's Sunday He realized just 25 cents per box and 6 cents of this he had to pay the fruit business was being overdone. There is one problem that this great west is up against and that is distance from market. I made a discovery one day while looking at a large map of the United States. I drew an imaginary line from North to South across the map so that an equal area was trifle west of the middle of Nebraska The Ladies' Aid society held its and Kansas. And a fair approximate ten millions west of the line, leaving ninety millions to the east, or ten times as many mouths to feed in the east as as they have in the west per square mile. This man from Payette, Ida., said cost them 40 cents per box freight to Chicago and 50 cents to New York. While they were flooding the East with literature telling about the pos sibilities in wesern fruit growing. many farmers in the East got the fev er also and planted orchards at home Thousands of dollars of Cleveland money is now being invested in West Virginia orchards where they can pro duce just as fine looking apples as they can in the west and of superior quality, and where they can deliver them in New York cold storage for eight cents per box. It is nonsense to say that the west is the only place where fine apples can be grown. I have several times ordered my supply of apples from Green township grower who always sends me just as fine apples as they dare produce in Oregon. Give your orchards the same attention that they do in the west in cultivaion, spraying thinning the fruit, and you will have the same fine fruit.

I am reminded of the old farmer o years ago who went on horseback to buy a pig. In order to carry it home he placed the plg in one end of a bag, with corn in the other end to balance the pig. A neighbor asked him what breed the pig was. He replied that it was just common pig; that the breed was in the other end of the bag. The same is true with almost every crop the farmer grows. There is always more in the soil and cultivation than in the breed. I do not wish to be misunderstood as believing there is nothing in selection of breed or variety. There is certainly very much, but there is much more in Of all the west that we have ye visited to my mind the Santa Clara Valley, about 50 miles south of San Francisco, is the best, especially for fruit growing. We vistled a 700-acre vegetable seed growing ranch, where much of the seed we handle is grown, and the owner, Mr. Fosgate, shower us a good time by driving us through e of the Valley in his touring car He drove us about 65 miles, including a visit to Leland Stanford University at Palo Alto and fully 50 of the 6 miles was through solid orchards with fruit trees on both sides of the road as far as we could see. This is the greatest prune growing section in the world, with thousands of acres of

'cots" (apricots) cherries, Bartlett pears, nectarines and grapes. man told me he would have 300 tons of Bartlett pears; another expected to have 600 tons of prones. The important feature about fruit growing in this section is that only a small per cent of fresh fruit is sent to market. There are sufficient canning factories to consume the fruit. We visited one canery in Santa Clara where they employgrowing industry. We have seen so ed 700 people with a daily capacity of one hundred thousand cans. The "cots" and prunes are all dried by of development that I wonder what the owners and sold in bulk to dealers they will do with all the fruit when all | who grade and pack the dried fruit for market. Prunes are allowed to age, as a large majority are yet too ripen on the trees and drop to the ground, and are then ipcked up in are then washed, dipped in lye and feet and placed on the ground in the the fertile valleys of Eastern Oregon, sun to dry, which requires about a week, there being absolutely no rain for 4 or 5 months during harvest time. Dealers are only offering 31/2 cents per pound for the prune crop.

I was told by several people that in ome sections of California the peach crop is so large and prices so low that the fruit is allowed to rot on the ground, presumably no canneries to take care of it. We spent three very pleasant days visiting A. M. McCline and family at Santa Clara, who apparently are doing well and would not think of returning to Ohio. Their eldest daughter, Nola, recently married a Mr. Wilcox whose father owns one of the largest Bartlett pear ranches in the Valley. We also visited the daughter of Mr. and Another speculative orchard proposition might be mentioned. About planted to fruit trees, mostly just recently planted. Near the railroad was a large sign containing the following: Co-operative Colony, the Largest Orchards in the World." On inquiry I learned that the project is being mannewspaper and co-operative bank fame, About the time of the St. Louis world's fair the government undertook to profor some of his publications, and later when he started his co-operative bank they succeeded in closing up his business. I believe without any proof of intent to defraud on his part. He now has a suit against the U. S. Government for five million dollars, and n the meantime has started this cooperative orchard colony proposition. We leave tomorrow for Salt Lake City and Yellowstone Park, Ave had expected to visit the Grand Canyon in Arizona but have been told that the Southern plains are uncomfortably hot, so have decided to omit this part of
